VI- Reading Comprehension: f30 Marks)

30

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

When my parents were growing up, everyone used to have dinner together. That was a time when people always talked to each other. Then, in the 1950s, people started to get televisions. Life didn't change straight away, but when I was born in the 1970s, everyone had a television. I grew up with it. My family did sometimes have meals together in the dining room, but I also had my dinner while I watched television alone. A 'TV dinner' they used to call it. I enjoyed watching TV alone because I didn't miss any programmes. I watched too much TV, though.

Then, in my thirties, I got married and had children. To start with, I was careful about how much TV they watched, but soon I realised that it was useful to have the children in front of the TV while I did jobs around the house. Then, came the other screens: smartphones and tablets. I bought both my kids tablets when they were quite young. They didn't have a problem playing with them. It was putting the tablets down that they found difficult. They wanted to take them everywhere. I also have a smartphone, so I understand why my children like them so much. I'm an adult, though, so I don't use my phone all the time. Or so I thought!

Recently, however, I have read an article about how family life was being influenced by parents always checking their phones. Children are complaining that their parents spend more time checking their phones than they do talking to them. I couldn't believe that at first, but the article was based on a study done by Digital Awareness UK. Many children said that if they asked their parents to stop checking emails or social media during family time, they refused.

However, the parents who took part in the study didn't think they had a problem with their phones. They were just like me. When my children tell me to stop using my phone sometimes, I tell them that I'm checking my work emails. But that's not always the truth.

So now we're trying to make changes in the house to get quality family time back. We're all allowed screen time, but we also put our screens away in a box. Not only that, but we also play games — the ones I used to play when I was a child. We have dinner in the dining room, too.

Lifeline Express is the world's first hospital on a train. It started with a simple idea: take the hospital to people who do not have access to health care services in rural areas. An Indian foundation suggested the idea to the Ministry of Railways. Shortly after, the Railways and the foundation signed an agreement in which the Railways would offer a three-cabin train and provide water and electricity while the foundation would provide medical services.

There are fewer than 10 doctors to every 10,000 inhabitants in India. Many people must travel hundreds of miles to reach the nearest hospital. So, the train hospital is their only hope for medical treatment. For 26 years, Lifeline Express has been travelling through India to bring health services to millions of Indians who are in dire need of health care. It has helped many patients with sight, hearing or movement problems.

The Lifeline Express train regularly camps in different parts of the country. Each camp lasts 35 days and involves treating patients, training local doctors and raising health awareness among rural population. Dr. Sarin, Lifeline Express chairman, said: "Now, the train hospital is operating with only three cabins. Soon, two new cabins will be added. A lot of help comes from companies, individuals, and doctors across the country. But we still need to improve our services. We ought to make them more convenient. We need a blood bank and modern equipment to do major surgeries. Hundreds of villagers are in urgent need of help."

The Lifeline Express train is not only treating patients but changing their social lives as well. Dr. Nagda is a surgeon who has volunteered to work on the Lifeline Express train for the last 16 years. He remembers receiving a wedding invitation from Sajida, a girl he once treated. "When she came to me as a child, she had a foot injury. She could not walk properly. I told her father that after treatment she would be able to go to school. After the surgery, she could walk normally. She even finished her studies and got married." The train hospital has gained international fame. It has saved over a million lives across the country and has inspired similar experiences in many other countries.

VII - Summary Making (8 Marks)

Read the following passage, then do as required:

Many perfumes are made by taking scented oil from natural ingredients or chemicals. These natural ingredients can include various plants, fruits and woods. For scents that do not occur in nature or do not produce essential oils, chemicals are used to increase the fragrance. Then, when all the ingredients have been chosen, they need to be blended. The oils are blended together according to a formula that has been tested by a master in the perfume industry. Later, perfumes are often aged for months or even years after the scent has been blended together because aging allows the different scents to mix. Finally, quality control is an important aspect of the perfume making process. It ensures that the perfume is free from any harmful or undesired products.

Lifeline Express is the world's first hospital on a train. It started with a simple idea: take the hospital to people who do not have access to health care services in rural areas. An Indian foundation suggested the idea to the Ministry of Railways. Shortly after, the Railways and the foundation signed an agreement in which the Railways would offer a three-cabin train and provide water and electricity while the foundation would provide medical services.

There are fewer than 10 doctors to every 10,000 inhabitants in India. Many people must travel hundreds of miles to reach the nearest hospital. So, the train hospital is their only hope for medical treatment. For 26 years, Lifeline Express has been travelling through India to bring health services to millions of Indians who are in dire need of health care. It has helped many patients with sight, hearing or movement problems.

The Lifeline Express train regularly camps in different parts of the country. VI- Reading Comprehension (110 Marks)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

Memory is the ability to take in information, encode it, store it, and regain it at a later time. Some people say they have no memory at all. But of course, we all have a memory. Our memory tells us who we are and helps us in the present of what we have learnt in the past.

Human memory involves the ability to both keep and recover information we have learnt or experienced. Sometimes we forget or misremember things which are not properly saved in memory in the first place.

In fact, we have different types of memory. For example, our visual memory helps us recall faces and places. Some people have a strong visual memory; they can remember exactly what they have seen, like pages of a book, as a complete picture.

Our verbal memory helps us remember words and figures we may have heard but not seen written, such as items of a shopping list, a chemical formula, dates, or a recipe. With our emotional memory, we recall situations or places where we had strong feelings, perhaps when we are happy or unhappy. In addition, other special types of memories may recall smell, taste, touch, sound, and performing physical movements.

We have two ways of storing any of these memories; our short-term memory and long-term memory. Our short-term memory stores different items for a short period of time. Older people in fact have a much better long-term memory than short-term because long-term memory gets better with age. They may forget what they have done only a few hours ago, but have the clearest remembrance of when they were very young.

You might assume that the more we remember the better. How wonderful never to forget anything! But in fact, we need to forget. If we remembered all our unhappy times, we would become mentally ill. Indeed, a few people do become ill because of this. A case is recorded of one man whose memories were so strong that he sometimes did not know whether he was really experiencing something, such as looking at an alarm clock in the morning or crossing the road, or just remembering having done it in the past.

No matter how great our memory is, there are a few things we can do to make it better, for example reciting and memorising the Holy Quran.

The African elephant is one of the different types of elephants. An adult African elephant's trunk is about two metres long. Second, elephants use their trunks as snorkels to breathe when they walk in deep water. Third, they use their trunks to pick a berry from the ground or a single leaf off a tree. Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

Memory is the ability to take in information, encode it, store it, and regain it at a later time. Some people say they have no memory at all. But of course, we all have a memory. Our memory tells us who we are and helps us in the present of what we have learnt in the past.

Human memory involves the ability to both keep and recover information we have learnt or experienced. Sometimes we forget or misremember things which are not properly saved in memory in the first place.

In fact, we have different types of memory. For example, our visual memory helps us recall faces and places. Some people have a strong visual memory; they can remember exactly what they have seen, like pages of a book, as a complete picture.

Our verbal memory helps us remember words and figures we may have heard but not seen written, such as items of a shopping list, a chemical formula, dates, or a recipe. With our emotional memory, we recall situations or places where we had strong feelings, perhaps when we are happy or unhappy. In addition, smell, taste, touch, sound, and performing physical movements may be recalled by other special types of memories.

We have two ways of storing any of these memories; our short-term memory and long-term memory. Our short-term memory stores different items for a short period of time. Older people in fact have a much better long-term memory than short-term because long-term memory gets better with age. They may forget what they have done only a few hours ago, but have the clearest remembrance of when they were very young.

You might assume that the more we remember the better. How wonderful never to forget anything! But in fact, we need to forget. If we remembered all our unhappy times, we would become mentally ill. Indeed, a few people do become ill because of this. A case is recorded of one man whose memories were so strong that he sometimes did not know whether he was really experiencing something, such as looking at an alarm clock in the morning or crossing the road, or just remembering having done it in the past.

No matter how great our memory is, there are a few things we can do to make it better, for example reciting and memorising the Holy Quran.

The African elephant is one of the different types of elephants. An adult African elephant's trunk is about two metres long. Unlike most animals, African elephants use their trunks for different purposes. Since African elephants live where the weather is usually hot, they first use their trunks to help them keep cool by spraying cool water over their bodies. Second, elephants use their trunks as snorkels to breathe when they walk in deep water. Third, they use their trunks to pick a berry from the ground or a single leaf off a tree. Finally, like many other animals, elephants can use trunks for smelling. Such animal needs to be protected as it is facing a lot of threats.
