Second, we can take part in the process of recycling. For example, we can plant more trees. We can reduce waste by reusing bags, bottles and containers. Moreover, we can buy recycled products.

Finally, we say that recycling is good for the environment. By recycling, and only by recycling, we can live in a clean city.

Have you ever asked about the reasons of animal extinction? In Kuwait, new cities are built, so many rare animals disappeared. Rare animals are important to keep natural balance.

On the one hand, there are many reasons. For example, people cut down trees and that means that many birds and animals lose their habitat. Other people are practising illegal hunting. Also, pollution of the sea kills fish.

On the other hand, there are many solutions. For example, we can build natural reserves. We must plant more trees. Also, we must ban illegal hunting and fishing.

Finally, we say that saving rare animals is a must. By strict laws, and only by strict laws we can do that.

الوحدة السادسة - حيوانات مهددة بالانقراض – Unit (6) : Under ThreatReading Comprehension*Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

In some remote or far regions of the world, providing a good education can be a challenge. Here are three innovative solutions for helping all students to learn, no matter where they live.

The first school is the “School in the Cloud”. Educator Sugata Mitra says: "If you give a group of children a set of questions and a computer with an Internet connection, they will be able to find answers." Through Sugata Mitra's "School in the Cloud" project, students in remote classrooms teach themselves using a computer and the Internet. One school is in Korakati, a village in one of the poorest parts of India. Teachers from other parts of the world connect with the students by Zoom. The teachers guide the students as they explore information online. Since the first School in the Cloud opened in 2013, Sugata Mitra's project has spread to several countries around the world.

The second school is the “Horse-Powered Reading”. In Ethiopia, mobile libraries travel around the country, bringing books to young children. However, some parts of Ethiopia are very far and cannot be reached by road. An organisation called “Ethiopia Reads” has an unusual solution: a horse-powered library. A horse pulls a mobile or moveable library to the children's village. It can reach far areas. A storyteller travels with the library, and at each village, children gather for a few hours to hear stories from books, from which they develop basic reading and writing skills. For many, it is the first time they have ever opened a book, and it is an experience these children will never forget.

The third school is the “School on the Move”. In western Mongolia, many families do not have a permanent home. Instead, these families move from place to place with their sheep and cows, often staying for just a few weeks at a time. In 1998, UNICEF launched a programme to help the children of these families receive education. Mobile kindergartens, schools for very young children, now follow the families as they move across the land. Each kindergarten takes place in a ger, a traditional tent that is easy to put up and take down. With these mobile schools, UNICEF aims to provide all young Mongolian children with education, even in the most remote locations.
